TEACHING PHILOSOPHY: I believe literacy is the foundation of all learning, essential not only in language arts but across every subject area—from math to science to social studies—as it empowers students to access, interpret, and engage meaningfully with content. My teaching centers on the idea that every student brings a unique set of experiences, cultural knowledge, and perspectives that can and should be leveraged to make learning relevant and personal. By integrating these individual strengths into instruction, I aim to create a classroom environment where all learners feel seen, valued, and capable of academic success. Through this approach, literacy becomes both a tool for understanding the world and a means of expressing one's place within it.
